The project “Youth Participation in Protected Area Management in Rodna Mountains, Romania” is a collaboration between the Environmental Change Institute, University of Oxford, and the Administration of Rodna Mountains National Park (APNMR). The project originated in the desire to develop and implement a participatory management plan for the park by involving all stakeholders concerned, but in particular, students from local schools.

Financial support

This project is being implemented over three years between 2005-2008 and is funded by the Darwin Initiative UK, and the Romanian National Forest Administration, RNP-Romsilva, through Directia Silvica Bistrita.
