This poster complements Important Bird Areas in Fiji: conserving Fiji's natural heritage, compiled and edited by Vilikesa T Masibalavu and Guy Dutton, published by BirdLife International, June 2006. Its purpose is to heighten awareness of the urgent need to conserve the natural environment for Fiji's birds, through display in schools, public libraries, Department of the Environment and other government offices in the Fiji Islands, as well as in appropriate public places. Birds depicted are representative species of the IBAs shown here.

BirdLife International is a global partnership of non-government organisations committed to conserving birds and biodiversity for the benefit of all people. Through its Pacific Partnership Secretariat based in Suva, BirdLife International has established a programme in Fiji to assist the government in conserving its threatened and endemic birds through the identification and conservation of Important Bird Areas. BirdLife International has a presence in more than 100 countries. For further information, see www.birdlife.org

BirdLife International acknowledges the generous support of our principal sponsors the Darwin Initiative (funded and administered by the UK Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs) and the European Union. The co-operation of the Department of Environment, the National Trust for Fiji and the Institute of Applied Sciences at the University of the South Pacific is also gratefully acknowledged.
